Ridgefield sculptor featured in segment of OPB show

Camera crews spent hours following Ridgefield sculptor Beth Heron from May through October 2009. Those efforts came to fruition April 1, when an eight-minute segment on Heron, 54, appeared in an episode of "Oregon Art Beat" on Oregon Public Broadcasting.

Heron had been nervous about how all the footage would be edited, but was pleased with the result.

"I'm very happy," said Heron, an adjunct instructor of metal art and welded sculpture at Clark College in Vancouver. "I thought they did an excellent job."

The segment featured some of her friends and her son, Nick Kohler, as well as examples of her public art.

Among them was "Scend," a sculpture Heron created for Clark College to house a time capsule to be opened in 2034. The title refers to the lift of a wave, and was inspired by the idea of a message in a bottle adrift at sea.

"It's kind of like we're throwing a bottle out into the water and hoping someone in the future will find it and open it," Heron said.

Beth Heron created "Scend" to house a time capsule.

Clark falls to Concordia JV

The Concordia University junior varsity baseball team lost to the Eagles 6-2 Saturday, April 4. The Concordia team scored two runs and tied the game in the eighth inning but fell short of a comeback.

The Penguins (4-10) are playing as a club team this spring and in advance of next year's Southwest Athletic Association season. Concordia College baseball is scheduled to host doubleheaders at home on Saturday (doubleheader) and Sunday (doubleheader) at the Clark baseball field.