

Clark College communicators sweep PR competition

For their work in design, publications, photography and media relations, Clark College communications specialists have been honored by District VII of the National Council for Marketing and Public Relations. In the 2006 competition, the college took home three gold medallions, three silver medallions and two bronze medallions.

The NCMPR medallion awards competition recognizes outstanding publications, advertising and promotional campaigns created by college relations professionals in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Alaska and four provinces in Canada. The college competed against more than 160 entries.