

Cheers: To Clark College's annual Career Days event. Even if the event was limited to current Clark students, the four-day program would be worthwhile. But Clark opens it to the public, makes it free of charge, and combines the lessons on effective job-hunting with one of the metro area's largest career fairs. This year's events drew a wide variety of people ranging in age from teens to older workers. With high unemployment remaining a drag on the economy, Clark's event has the potential to boost not only individuals, but the entire community.
