

Clark College to offer new transfer degree

Health informatics information technology is the newest transfer degree program at Clark College.

It will be offered starting winter quarter 2012.

Health informatics is the study of resources and methods for the management of health information.

The field uses computer technology to coordinate the information systems used by hospital, medical clinics and health care professionals.

Students who complete the program can continue on to obtain a bachelor's degree at Oregon Institute of Technology, which has a campus near Wilsonville, Ore.

Information about the new program is available at www.clark.edu/cc/hiit.