CAMI JONER/The Columbian

Work continues on Clark College's $30 million satellite campus in east Vancouver's Columbia Tech Center. The four-story building is expected to open for fall classes in 2009. It will feature conference space and faculty offices along with 18 classrooms and eight science and computer labs for professional and technical training, general education courses, basic skills and personal-enrichment classes. The building was designed by LSW Architects of Vancouver. The general contractor is Todd Construction of Tigard, Ore.
