

People in business

■ Tami Jacobs, Clark College's disability support services director, recently received a state award for her work providing support to disabled students and for her state-level leadership role. Jacobs, who has worked for Clark College since 1997, also serves on a state-level board that advises community and technical colleges about issues concerning students with disabilities. Jacobs received the Ben Webinger Meritorias Service Award.

Tami Jacobs

■ Two dietitians from the Vancouver area received awards at the 2010 Washington State Dietetic Association meeting in Seattle on April 27. They are Debe Nagy-Nero, who received the Recognized Dietitian of the Year Award, and Lonnie Isaacson, who received the Clinical and Research Practice Award for Excellence.

■ Daniel J. Rogers was named chief financial officer of the Clark College Foundation. Prior to joining the organization, Rogers worked for Moss Adams as an audit manager. He is a licensed Certified Public Accountant in Washington and Oregon.

Daniel J. Rogers

The Washougal resident has worked on the foundation's audit for the past seven years.

In his new role, Rogers will oversee the foundation's administrative functions, finances and accounting and asset management including portfolio and real property investment activities. Rogers is a Clark College alumnus. After attending Clark, Rogers went on to graduate from Washington State University Vancouver summa cum laude earning a bachelor's in business administration with an accounting emphasis.